

THE MAGE CAGE

As I have well established in my seminal work on the True Nature of Evil, mages, witches and sourcerors are the most vile and dangerous threats to civil society. 'Tis therefore the most highest duty of any virtuous soul to try and rid the world of their foul machinations. To that end, I have devised herein comprehensive instructions to entrap such devious magi in an cage that counteracts their demonic powers.

— FROM THE APPENDICES OF THE NATURE OF EVIL, BY BROTHER DIDERIC ORNE, KEEPERS OF THE IMMACULATE FLAME

THE BASIC SETUP

The mage cage trap is a special invention designed to negate a magic user's ability to immediately escape it by using their nasty spells. It consists of three basic components: a lure to attract the mage, a trap to deliver them into the cage, and the metal cage of especially narrow make to hold them and negate their magical powers.

EXAMPLE TRAP

A narrow passage, only wide enough for one character to pass through, connects two dungeon rooms. Two metal bar doors block the way, the first is open, the second closed. Through the narrow bars, the room on the other side of the passage is visible. A large leather-bound book lies in a pedestal in the far room, very much looking like a magical grimoire. It is too large to fit through the metal bars of the door blocking the way.

Any character passing through the narrow passage can see the metal bar doors, resembling a strange portcullis or prison cell doors on both sides. A SPOT HIDDEN roll reveals a pressure plate on the ground that, when stepped on, closes and locks both doors, trapping anyone inside in the narrow metal cage. Springing the trap also sounds an alarm bell, somewhere closeby.

The cage is only large enough to hold a single person. It is low and narrow, so it does not allow a typically sized human to jump up and down inside. The floor inside the cage is made of metal strips, making it practically impossible to not touch metal while inside the cage.

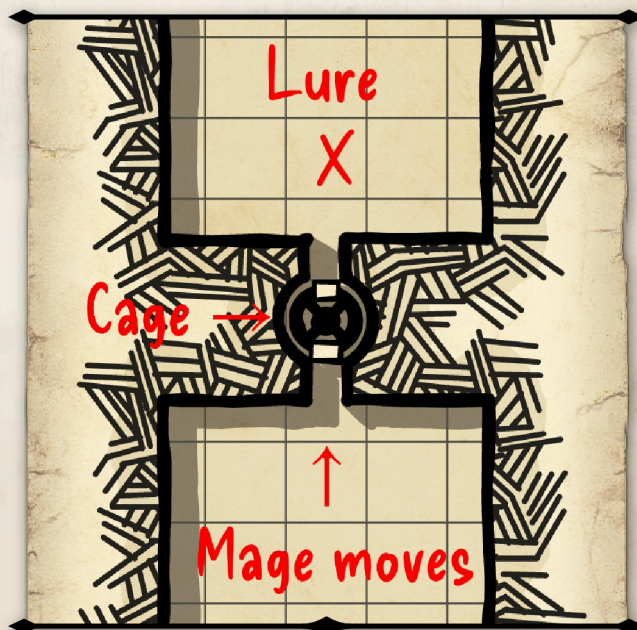

If the mage cage trap is still actively maintained, soon after it has sprung, a group of True Flame fanatics (with cultists stats, see Rulebook, page 105) appear to take the mage into custody – and deal with any collaborators that accompany them.

THE LURE: One of the best mage lures is, of course, a grimoire. It promises the mage new spells and magical insights to increase their powers. You don't need a real magic book, simply lay signs and magic runes pointing to such a price being hidden deep in some old ruin or dungeon to lure the mage into your trap.

THE TRAP: The most basic of traps is to place the lure inside the cage and rig its door to fall shut upon a creature's entry. But most mages sport some profane wit and would not fall for such a crude device – hence, I have devised a narrow path through with they must pass, wherein the cage can be placed (see the drawing below).

THE CAGE: It is of utmost importance that you do not let your prey utilize its demonic powers once captured. To that end, entrap the mage in a cage wrought of pure iron, in which no room for large movement remains. In lieu of a cage, a net made of metal chains also suffices.

Placed in such confines, the mage can be safely taken into custody and rendered into the cleansing flames.

To any readers of this document, be aware that these instructions have never been tested for their effectiveness and are in no way officially endorsed by the true Keepers of the immaculate Flame.