

DUNGEON COOKING

Food is one of the most important aspects of any expedition into a dungeon, deep cave, or haunted forest. When you run out of rations halfway across a mountain range or deep in a monster-filled dungeon, you have to improvise and cook with what you have at your disposal. This is a small guide to do so.

When you cook food (Rulebook, page 103), choose one of the options below and roll on the table to the right, or come up with your own description for your dish.

- ◆ [Technique] [monster parts] with [ingredients] [form]
- ◆ [Technique] [ingredients] with [ingredients] [form]
- ◆ [Monster parts] [form] with [technique] [ingredients]

Most food does not have an expiration date, but the GM may rule that some of your rations spoil if you roll badly on a pathfinding or make camp roll.

TYPES OF DISHES

D8	TECHNIQUES	PART	FORM
1	Boiled	Head	Stew
2	Fried	Neck	Rolls
3	Baked	Shoulder	Dumplings
4	Steamed	Loin	Soup
5	Smoked	Rib	Bowl
6	Roasted	Foot / Wing	Skewers
7	Braised	Leg	Wraps
8	Grilled	Tail	Slices

INGREDIENTS

You can get cooking ingredients from many different sources. You can buy vegetables, meat, or eggs from any village; forage, hunt, or fish for food in the wild; or even carve up a beast for its parts.

FORAGING: When foraging (Rulebook, page 103), roll D3 times on the table below to see what type of raw ration you find, depending on your surroundings. As a house rule, rolling a dragon can yield you D6 rations instead.

FORAGING TABLE

D10	CAVES & CAVERNS	FOREST & BUSHLAND
1	Creeping moss	Nuts & berries
2	Cave mushrooms	Forest mushrooms
3	Deep roots	Root vegetables
4	Sweet fern	Wild fruits
5	Rock lichen	Leafy greens
6	Pool algae	Wild bee honey (3 doses)
7	Worms & millipedes	Handful of insects
8	Reptile eggs	Bird eggs
9	Suspicious slime	Snails & slugs
10	Fungus stalks	Wild onions

BUTCHERING MONSTERS

To carve meat from a dead monster, you must make a BEAST LORE roll. A successful roll yields a number of raw rations and takes a certain amount of time depending on the monster's size (see table below). If you roll a dragon, you can re-roll and pick the better result. If the roll fails, you puncture a foul organ or venomous gland and spoil the meat. No further attempts can be made on the same beast. You can roll on the table above to randomize which parts of a beast you carve out, as long as it makes sense. A giant amoeba (Bestiary, page 78), in contrast, simply yields chunks of amoeba jelly.

Rolls to skin a monster or to extract ingredients for ALCHEMY can be attempted independently.

MONSTER PARTS

SIZE	RATIONS	TIME
Small	1	1 stretch
Swarm	D4	2 stretches
Normal	2D6	2 stretches
Large	4D6	1 shift
Huge	4D6 for each shift of work, up to its HP.	Starts to rot within D3 days

PIES & PASTRIES

BAKED GOODS

A character with the MASTER CHEF heroic ability and access to water and an oven can take a shift to bake a tray (a full item slot's worth) of baked goods. If you have a fully equipped kitchen at your disposal, you can bake several trays during the same shift. Each tray of baked goods requires one unit or dose of each of the listed ingredients.

Simple recipes like trail bread and grain bars can be made by anyone with a successful BUSHCRAFT roll for cooking (Rulebook, page 103). They only require access to water and a fire – a field kitchen grants a boon.

CONSUMING BAKED GOODS: Unlike drinking a potion, you cannot eat these baked goods during combat or otherwise strenuous activity. When eaten during a stretch rest or just before a shift rest, they grant their effects in addition to those gained from the rest.

If your group uses the Memento optional rule (Rulebook, page 27), you cannot heal a condition from the memento and a baked good during the same stretch rest.

DAILY NEED: Once you have eaten food items with a combined weight of 1/4, you have covered your need for food for the day.
